The Balanced Plate Nutrition Plan

All Things in Balance: The Balanced Plate

If you are overwhelmed by the plethora of information on how to eat a balanced diet, start simply with creating a balanced approach to nutritional intake. This simple plan is: eat more frequently, smaller meals, each meal made up of a “balanced plate” (see below), drink more water, avoid eating out, avoid precooked or pre-prepared foods.

The “balanced plate” for each meal is simple; use the pictures below as a visual guide as well as the blue zones longevity inspired food pyramid as your guide. Half the plate is raw or lightly cooked green veggies, preferably leafy greens and herbs, 1/4 of the plate is lean (not fatty) protein, 1/4 of the plate is clean, low glycemic carbohydrates. Add 1-2 heaping tablespoon of a healthy fat source (nuts, coconut or olive oil, avocado), and a small amount of boosters (super foods and probiotics) and you get the balanced plate!

This is a great place to begin. Add and subtract amounts based on what you feel your own body needs. But add or subtract in the same balance (add an equal amount to all areas or take away a small amount from all areas).
